

Published based on Dog Crate Training

Dog Crate Training

I hope that you understand why you should get a crate for your dog. A lot of families don't want to put THEIR pet in a crate because it looks like a cage! First, please don't call it as a cage. Think of it as a safe haven that your dog knows he can go to. Remember, dogs are pack animals, even though we try and forget that! When dogs were wild they slept together in dens. The dens made them feel safe from being hunted by other animals. When they all slept together, there was always a feeling of being safe. The dens were usually small, just large enough to turn around in, lie down and feel comfortable. This is the same security that they have in their crate. They feel safe and secure and it is a cozy home for them to call only theirs. You can also think of it as their own room, just as you have your own room.

When you first got your puppy, it was wise for you to get them used to staying in their crate, especially overnight and when you were not home. When done this way, they are house-trained quickly. The best way to secure your pet when in the car is by putting them in their crate? Most pets after getting used to their cage, they consider it their home and don't want to travel outside of the crate. They feel safe and secure. Of course, while you were training them to go potty only when you brought them outside, the crate bedding that you provided your puppy wasn't the best and most comfortable. If your pet is past the training stage, for them to be really comfortable, you should get them a nice comfortable mat to put in their crate. That is why I am so glad that you found my site about dog crate bedding.

This is another reason that a dog crate is so important while your dog is still a puppy. Puppies will use chew-toys and most anything else to ruin when they are getting their adult teeth. Giving them a toy to chew on helps, but also having them in their crate while you can't be with them all the time, really saves on the shoes, couch legs, table legs, and I'm sure you can probably add a few others!

We are the proud owners of a mix-breed and love her a lot. Probably, much like you do with your pet. She's getting around a lot slower than she once did, since she is older now. We have put a new mat in her crate and she seems to really enjoy it. It has a small rim around the outer edge, just enough so she can rest her head on it while looking out of her crate door. And it is machine washable! Something you really need to consider when deciding on your dog's bedding.

While we were researching the dog crate bedding, I found that it was hard to find online. This is the reason that this site is just for bedding for your dog. Join our site a lot so you gain knowledge about other pet supplies. I want to keep it up-to-date for you and everyone else that is looking for bedding for your dog. I hope you have found this a little helpful. Please leave a comment if you'd like and share some of your experiences about your dog. Thank you for stopping by!

You can also find this article published on Dog Crate Training, and on the tag pages Beds for dogs, crate, crate training, crates, Dog Beds, Dog crate bedding, puppies.