

Published based on Great Dane Puppy Training: Teaching Puppies Not To Jump

Great Dane Puppy Training: Teaching Puppies Not To Jump

There are many things you need to teach your pup during great dane puppy training. In addition to the obligatory potty training, it is also vital that your pet knows how to pay attention to different commands so as to prevent him from acquiring undesirable behaviors such as jumping. While a jumping puppy is usually a heartwarming gesture of your pup's delight to see you or play with you, it must stop at the earliest possible time. A mature great dane can measure for about seven feet on his hind legs is more likely to topple you down if he jumps up or leans on you. Training him at a young age can spare you from possible injuries, stress and other issues you might run into as a result of his behavior.

Ignore. A lot of dogs jump because of excitement after seeing you or other members of the family he's fond of. Freaking out, running away or screaming at him won't get him to stop jumping but will instead encourage him to continue because to a dog's viewpoint, your actions are signs that you're excited too and wants to play with him. If you are constantly welcomed with a jumping puppy, one of the solutions to stop the issue is to ignore him. Just walk and pay no attention to him completely regardless of his attempt to jump on you. If your young pup settles to an acceptable behavior like sitting or standing still, reward him for that. Praising and petting him will certainly let him understand that you like what he just did.

Obedience. Solving dog behavior problems is one of the reasons why basic commands ought to be taught during dog training. A pet that is reliably trained with the commands like "down", "sit" and "stay" is less difficult to control regardless of what the situation is. The moment you see your dog running towards you, giving such commands in a firm tone of voice can prevent him from doing what he wants to do – to jump on you.

Great dane puppy training to teach your young pup not to jump can be a tricky task. But by being consistent, patient and determined, he'll surely get rid of the habit eventually. It helps to get your family a part of the training too.

You can also find this article published on Great Dane Puppy Training: Teaching Puppies Not To Jump, and on the tag pages dog training, Dogs, great dane puppy, great dane puppy training.