Good pet health is closely related to grooming. When well taken care of, animals do feel great. The best dog grooming you can provide to your four-legged friend depends on several factors: your budget, the breed, the size of the dog and its personality. Moreover, nail cutting, hair combing and ear cleaning have to become part of the grooming routine performed regularly. The best dog grooming is conducted following a vet's suggestions. You can thus groom the pet at home or take it to a professional grooming salon for the operation.

Brushing is the grooming part that most dogs enjoy, and a shiny clean coat is the right premise for good health. Here you will have to adjust the brushes to the dog's coat type. Thus, thick-haired dogs require daily brushing to prevent hair matting and tangling. It does not take long and it makes things a lot easier when you take the dog to the groomer for the regular grooming routine. Medium-haired dogs require brushing once a week only, while short-haired breeds are the easiest to care for in terms of brushing. Make sure to provide the best dog grooming possible during the shedding season as a way to prevent hair building up or excessive shedding.

While brushing is a joy, nail trimming is a nightmare. Handling the paws is something difficult no matter the dog which is why lots of owners are afraid that they might hurt the animal during the process. Finding the best dog grooming for the matter would be a form to minimize discomfort and eliminate the pet's fear of pain. A professional groomer or vet technician should be able to handle the monthly nail trimming without any problem, which is the best idea for everybody involved.

Bathing is another harsh time for pets and owners. Some dogs love washing, but what about a wet dog running out of the tub and making a mess everywhere in the house? Although a bath once a month is enough, there is no harm in bathing them weekly particularly if you have a professional groomer handle the entire operation. Other than smell, bathing makes the perfect solution for hair parasites. Use special dog shampoos recommended by the vet so as to eliminate fleas and ticks without any inconvenience.
