Stop Dogs from Barking

Dogs bark for a variety of reasons. A dog will bark to alert you to the approach of an unfamiliar person or to let you know that a burglar has broken into your home. Fear and pain are other reasons for dog barking. A dog may bark to intimidate you or your family members, or as a way to get your attention.

Whatever the reason, we are all in agreement that it can be extremely aggravating and seek ways to stop dogs barking. Some owners of dogs that constantly bark are reported for disturbing the peace. Happily, there are many ways to stop a dog from barking for no particular reason.

The best way to stop dogs barking is to train your dog when it is appropriate for him to bark. There are several options but the best technique is the proven reward/reprimand method. This technique is successful and humane.

As an alternative to this method of training, some dog owners choose to use an electronic collar, also known as a bark collar. When a dog barks, the collar around his neck is activated. Your dog will be startled by the small electric shock being produced by the collar. Gradually, the dog barking stops as the dog associates his barking with a painful experience. In my opinion, bark collars are a cruel way of training dogs to stop barking.

Not all dogs realize that the uncomfortable shock is directly related to their barking; electronic collars should not be used for this reason and many others. They develop a tolerance for the electronic shocks and continue barking. In addition, if the prongs on the collar do not touch the skin of a dog with a thick coat, he will probably not feel the electric shock. As well, there are few examples where simply using an electronic collar will stop dog barking. Usually, optimal results are obtained by including dog obedience training.

Although electronic dog collars don't really hurt dogs, some people think that they could be discouraging to dogs. It is for this reason that these people choose to use citronella collars, which work on the same principle as electronic collars. When the dog barks, a mist is produced from the Citronella collar. The smell is disliked by most dogs. Eventually, dogs realize that the revolting aroma is produced when they bark, so they stop barking to prevent the smell. They are probably just about as successful as electronic collars.

The majority of dog trainers and veterinarians feel that, while barking collars can be useful tools, they are definitely not a substitute for good dog obedience training. Also, obedience training for dogs does much more than just stop dogs from barking. It also helps with other dog behavior problems.

The option of surgery to stop dogs barking is both drastic and barbaric in my opinion. Tissue is surgically removed from the larynx to stop dogs from barking. Sometimes, the dog's ability to bark returns, making the surgery a waste of time and money. Thankfully, most vets oppose the surgical method to stop dogs barking.

In closing, I hope we have managed to convince you that the most effective way to stop dogs barking is with good quality obedience training. You should bear in mind that, if your dogs stops barking by using a barking collar, he will also not alert you to an intruder in your house. By providing your dog with good obedience training, he will protect you and your family but he will also understand when barking is appropriate.
