Why Dog Leash is important?

A close friend of mine had told me a few days back, regarding how he saw this dog that was helping a blind lady. The guide dog got distracted and those around him wanted to play with him, but the owner pulled his Dog Leash abruptly. My friend considered this was nasty and unkind. I explained to him that dogs that assist the blind should not be distracted. The guide dogs that assist the blind are trained with a dog harness and leash. A number of people are involved in the teaching of the blind dog guides. Their teaching is dynamic and complete. The dog has to be prepared of his job and how to get there without any unlikable event for his owner.

Blind people have to have total faith in their dogs. They do feel affection for their dogs, furthermore exercise them and feed them as well. But they are not play dogs. From the time they are young they are chosen for this great job based on the character of the dog. The sightless person will go wherever the dog escort. He makes certain that she does not hit into anything as they are on foot outside. It is very important that the dog is not troubled while crossing the road along with his owner. Cars must offer them the right of way also not to sound the horn or shout at them. If the dog gets distracted the owner will get and that can lead to a disaster.

The way the owner holds on to the Dog leash is important. The owner delicately pulls on the leash that hauls on the harness as well holds him back. I made him understandable to my friend that she wasn't being mean to her dog but quite corrective. He still thinks it was mean. Since there are people who believe they can pat and have fun with a blind dog guide, we have to teach the people that this is extremely serious and may perhaps put at risk the life of the blind person.

As those of us blessed with sight come across a blind person with a guide dog we must respect their delicate relationship. If you wish to support the blind person, you may perhaps humanely guide her on the other side of the road. The blind dog guide must always be vigilant of his surroundings. The only way this may perhaps come about is if the dog is in his harness and the blind owner has a terrific hold on the leash.
